1. What's the back story to the project?

- Why do you need an LMS?
- What research have you undertaken to identify the key features you require from a system?
- Are you planning a smaller scale pilot to get going?
- What are your business expectations for a successful project?

2. Who are the project stakeholders?

- Who is leading the project?
- If there are multiple teams involved, have you agreed on a single vision or are there some differences in their requirements?
- Who will manage the day to day administration of the site after it's been launched?

3. Let's look at your project goals.

- Is this a long-term solution or one that has a fixed lifetime to meet a specific need?
- How many learners will access the system in the first year?
- What is the criteria against which you will measure the project's success?

4. Engage your users.

- What format will your core content be in? For example: PDF, PowerPoint, Video, SCORM etc.
- What activities will your learners be doing on the site? e.g. tests/exams, submitting work for assessment, sharing content, collaborating or discussing topics.
- To what extent will your branding need to be reflected in the look and feel of the site?
- Are you going to take a blended learning approach? e.g. combining classroom sessions and online courses.

5. Get started!

- Get approval from management and finance so you have the authority to progress.
- Agree time scales internally. Have a goal set for your project go live date!
